as used herein, the term "electron ionization" or "e" refers to methods in which an analyte of interest in a gaseous or vapor phase interacts with a flow of electrons.